

TRENDS in PRACTICE

By Justin Allen

Over the course of time it has taken readers and I to observe the upward trend of conventional medical clients turning to alternative therapy applications to reclaim their health, we have been introduced to a list of professionals and practitioners finally making their own adjustments to fit these changes. Now, we arrive at a center that has, since its beginnings, directed its entire focus toward assisting clients exclusively using innovative and integrative medicine and therapy.

Conveniently located near the northern end of the Dallas/Fort Worth International Airport, Dr. Gary Sconyers, N.D., works as the director of his integrative therapy clinic, The Health Resource Center of Flower Mound Texas. His wife and son, Ann and Bryan, work alongside him as well to help treat clients throughout their busy days. Ann Sconyers is the Health Center's manager who works to ensure that operations are always flowing smoothly and that clients are being met with friendly services. Along with guiding the daily office traffic, she is also responsible for conducting data assessments and follow-up counselling for clients. "In order to make sure that we are consistent in addressing our clients' needs," she says, "we use the Zyto system to conduct the most accurate wellness assessments. It creates an ideal relationship when the device is utilized with one of our PulsedTech instruments. It allows us to determine what frequencies will work best with our clients, and then we are able to deliver them effectively through the PulsedTech equipment." Ann has also taken part in several online videos to introduce potential clients to her husband's practice and the many innovations that the Health Resource Center employs. Their office is conveniently and centrally located near the DFW Airport to allow speedy assistance for everyone traveling domestically and from abroad that require treatment in a timely fashion. Many different individuals with as many different cases make their way into the Health Resource Center each day to visit with Dr. Sconyers and his associate practitioners. The availability of a larger staff-to-client ratio permits more time for them to spend effectively working with clients. Thanks to the list of capabilities provided by the technology they use to assist individuals, Dr. Sconyers and his employees are able to care for nearly fifteen clients a day without the hassles of a traditional medical office.

Doctor Gary Sconyers had initially entered the field of alternative health practices when looking for treatments to assist his son who, at only sixteen months, was vaccine-injured and entered the autism spectrum as a result. Doctors who Gary and his wife spoke with were only capable of providing unwanted resolutions to their son's case that would not benefit him nearly as well as integrative routines. After searching restlessly for healthy solutions to his son's condition and repeatedly falling short, Gary left his work in a medical lab to return to school to learn naturopathic health care. During his education he began an internship with an acupuncturist who used energy medicine and also introduced him to its effectiveness. With his working knowledge of alternative methods and the support of his wife and quality treatment, Dr. Sconyers was able to help Bryan overcome great obstacles and make a wonderful recovery. Since then, he has embraced the idea of frequency-specific technology being used to assist others with medical disorders and now, Bryan works with special needs children at the family's center and is also a certified massage therapist.

Frequency-specific technology and therapy continue to prove to enhance the experience of the user and the quality of feedback for their practitioners. They have also become procedures embraced at the Health Resource Center. "We feel strongly that frequency-specific and plasma technologies truly help clients regain their health," Mrs. Sconyers says, adding that she'd "recommend that our clients invest in purchasing a Pulsed Tech instrument for home to continue their treatment. We have often even kept a protocol running on one of our machines here in the office for our employees."

Since 2005, Dr. Gary Sconyers has been assisting clients with a variety of disorders. Many who come to the Health Resource Center have already been diagnosed with cases such as ADD or ADHD, Lyme disease, have had a stroke, or even just require healthier nutrition guidance. Their clients often have also exhausted nearly all conventional treatment methods before arriving at the Center. Ann Sconyers confirms, "There are a variety of cases that we help clients address. The Zyto assessment system and the EEG biofeedback equipment that we use from Clear Mind Center all work wonderfully with our PulsedTech instruments." Strategic combinations and use of this unique equipment allow the Resource Center practitioners to locate and address more issues more effectively. "We've maintained some of the first generation PulsedTech P3 plasma equipment and still have not experienced any negative issues with it or our contact PFG instruments. Since we began our association with PulsedTech, we have continually been very pleased with the ongoing development, education and support that they readily provide."

The symbiotic relationship that has evolved over these years between the Health Resource Center and PulsedTech has proven itself to be a benefit to both parties, however, the true beneficiaries are the end-users who gain the most. Mr. Jimmie Holman, a director at PulsedTech Research, says, "HRC and their affiliates are indeed a recommended quality resource for integrative and alternative guidance for clients to reclaim and maintain optimal health. These preferred practitioners are most aware of how to interpret a client's assessment and what guidance they would need to make a healthy recovery from whatever ailment may be affecting them. It is that guidance and monitoring which they provide that plays a most vital role in their clients' recoveries. In many cases of which we are aware, the treatments and recoveries are ones which would not have been available or even possible by traditional medical practice!" Mr. Holman also adds, "That is why it is certainly a pleasure to work with Dr. Sconyers and his knowledgeable associates as one of our preferred distributors for the equipment. They provide the invaluable specialized value-added expertise most developers are restricted from including as part of the systems we manufacture."

As many have started to notice, there are a growing number of innovative health professionals available who, instead of only turning patients over to the effects of prescriptions, have chosen to help clients by guiding, directing and implementing these new methods and tools to attack the actual sources of illness and physical pain. With the use of alternative mechanisms, such as those offered at the Health Resource Center of Flower Mound Texas, Dr. Gary Sconyers, his wife Ann, and their roster of dedicated associates are sweeping their clients out from under the dusty rug of conventional medical treatment and back into a state of optimal health and wellness.
